INTRODUCTION.

THE catalogue of the Library of Syon Monastery, Isleworth, is numbered 141 among the manuscripts of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The nature of its contents was made known in part by Tanner, who used it for his Bibliotheca Britannica, collecting from it the names of certain English writers, and their works, of whose existence there is no other record[1]. As Tanner's references are all to the titles of manuscripts it has been assumed that the catalogue is one of manuscripts. Further enquiry shews that it is in great part a catalogue of printed books; printed books and manuscripts were placed side by side upon the shelves.

The date at which the catalogue was made can be only approximately fixed. The entries are not all in one hand, but fall into two groups, the earlier being all in one hand, the later in several hands, and entered upon erasures or under the later class-marks which have been left blank by the original compiler. It would seem that the original compiler was at work early in the sixteenth century[2]; a 1504 edition is perhaps the latest entered in his hand. Other writers have entered the library's acquisitions 1504—1526. I name 1526 as a limit because I have found no books entered which were printed later than 1526. It would seem that when the cataloguers of the second period were at work they found that books had been lost. The titles of these they carefully erased[1], to make space for the titles of new books. A clue to the losses was however allowed to remain in the Index, which is in the earlier writer's hand.

This Index again, together with certain cross-references in the text, shews that the library was being reorganized 1504—1526, but imperfectly reorganized. Books were being shifted about, and the new scheme, whatever it was, got no further than the destruction of the old. Books mentioned in the Index as under one class-mark occur in the text under another, and it becomes difficult in some cases to distinguish the lost from the displaced books. There is evidence that the librarian's work was not so carefully done in the later period as it was in the earlier. Some of the new entries are carelessly written; the new acquisitions are not paginated as nearly all the early ones were; the new titles are not put in the index; the old subject-grouping has been ignored; in fact the librarian of the later period must have depended on his memory rather than on the catalogue if he wished to lay his hand on the book he sought.

The catalogue throws no new light on the question of mediæval library arrangements. The subject-groups arranged by the first cataloguer were distinguished after the usual fashion by capital letters, A to V. Within each class Arabic numerals are used as an additional mark. The entry of these principal class-marks is throughout in one hand. But there is also a subsidiary class-mark, noted in the margin in a later hand. It is generally a small letter of the alphabet and an Arabic number, sometimes the latter only. The clue to the meaning of these marks, which follow no consecutive sequence, has not been found. It is possible that they are cross-references to another catalogue, or to one of the unfinished schemes of the would-be reorganizers.

The classification[2] is very rough, and now appears all the more so because it was carelessly dealt with when the new acquisitions were entered. Generally speaking A includes grammar and classics (77 volumes), B, medicine, astrology, a few classics (55), C, philosophy (46), D, commentaries on the Sentences (128), E, Bibles and Concordances (75), F—I, commentaries on the Old and New Testament (232), K, history (65), L, dictionaries (58), M, Lives of the Saints (121), N, Fathers (88), O, devotional tracts (98), P to S, chiefly sermons, over 70 books in each class, T, canon law (104), V, civil law (21). The size of the volume does not determine its shelf; folios, quartos and octavos are sometimes placed side by side. Space has been left for 1465 volumes, and the titles of 1421 have been entered. This of course by no means represents the number of distinct works in the library, for some volumes contain many treatises which have been bound together to economize binding and space. Donors and librarians alike seem to have been indifferent to the congruity of the books that were bound together; A 1 contains Horace's satires bound with St Thomas of Canterbury's life; elsewhere a Latin translation of Homer is bound with a Rabanus Maurus' De laude crucis.

As a means of identifying the volumes, the writer of the catalogue has entered in most cases the two first words of the second leaf. By this means it has been possible to name the editions of nearly 400 printed books. It would no doubt have been possible to identify many more if the librarian had noted the second leaf of separate works bound as one volume, and very many more if modern bibliographers had adhered to the mediæval custom of noting the words that begin the second leaf. As things are, the enquiry is necessarily laborious whenever the number of editions to be handled is great. Patience has often failed me, but since with luck it is possible that any hunt may prove exciting, the spirit of the chase urged me on; and the chase grew into a duty, for it soon became clear that without some identification of the editions, the Syon catalogue loses the greater part of its value. Among the purposes which the result of the enquiry may serve, there is to be included the study of the English printed-book trade[1] before 1526, for which the catalogue provides some statistics (see Appendix II.). It will be noticed that the English presses are very poorly represented. Wynkyn de Worde gave a copy of his Capgrave and of his Hortus Vocabulorum. Henry VIII. gave a copy of his book against Luther printed by Pynson. No work from Caxton's press has been identified.

The catalogue of Syon library has a special interest inasmuch as it offers a means of estimating the intellectual and literary resources which were at the disposal of a flourishing religious house shortly before the Reformation. It offers positive evidence in its rich collection of early printed books, and negative evidence in the absence of books in Greek, at a time when the Greek Aldines were being given to the world. The Greek texts were Erasmus's New Testament, the Psalter and B 10; there was also a Hebrew Psalter. The dearth is the more remarkable as Reynold, one of its principal benefactors, was a good Greek and Hebrew scholar. Its strength lay in the Latin translations of the Renaissance; for instance, Argyropoulos, Hermolaus Barbarus, Gaza, Marsilius Ficinus, G. Trapezuntios, and Erasmus are well represented as translators from the Greek. The monastery kept pace with the new learning in its Latin Renaissance literature; Coluccio, Leonardo Bruni, Poggio, Bessarion, Platina, Poliziano, Pico della Mirandola, are here, but there are no books in Italian. Petrarch appears as a Latin writer on the penitential psalms, Boccaccio as the author of a dictionary of classical antiquities. Savonarola, De virtute fidei, is there. Reuchlin represents the German humanists, but there are no books in German. From the English Renaissance, Colet's sermon to the clergy of St Paul's is here, and Linacre's translation of Proclus. More is represented by the translations of Lucian in G 12 which he wrote with Erasmus.

[1] On this subject cf. Wattenbach's Schriftwesen (1896), p. 561, and Kirchhoff's Handschriftenhändler and Weitere Beiträge.

The library was pre-eminently a library of Latin books; the librarian mentions the fact when the work he enters is in any other language, and it may be concluded when there is no such entry that the work is in Latin. The total of works in English, consisting chiefly of small theological tracts, is 26, of French, 4. The absence of books in English is the more remarkable as the foundress of the Brigettine order sought to enforce the use of the native language, requiring it to be spoken at such times as conversation was allowed, with a penalty on the use of Latin[1]. At Wadsten, the parent-house in Sweden, many Swedish translations were prepared and printed[2].

Among the points of interest in this catalogue to which it may be desirable to call attention here, it may be noticed that the library at one time possessed several works of Wyclif, but it is in the index only that the titles of the majority are found. Several of the titles do not appear to be known from any other source. Against the work De sacramento altaris the writer of the index puts a note of warning. The name of Luther occurs three times; Syon had the papal bull against him, Henry VIII.'s book against him, Fisher against him, but nothing from his own pen.

The library was strong in classical Latin poetry while the fathers of English poetry are ignored. Virgil, Ovid and Horace however are better represented in the index than they are in the text, and Juvenal, Persius, Statius are in the index only. The classical Latin historians again are better represented than the English and French, but there were copies of Geoffrey of Monmouth, Henry of Huntingdon, Robert de Torigny, Gervase of Tilbury, Higden and Gaguin. What was presumably the Historia Britonum and an abbreviated William of Malmesbury were lost in the original K 18. (See App. IV.)

[1] This rule does not seem to have been followed at Syon. See additions to the Rule, Aungier, p. 388. "In the chafynghowys al brethren schal speke latyn or els keep silence outtake certayn days of Cristemasse." The rule for the nuns was not to speak at all, "or else passing soft," no doubt in English, as it is clear from other passages that many of the nuns were ignorant of Latin.

[2] Flavigny, S. Brigitte de Suède (1892).

A treasure which the librarian valued was M 27 "Melos contemplacionis Ricardi Hampole et dicitur manu propria hunc scripsisse librum." A large proportion of the books are those prescribed in the various mediæval University courses.

The number of losses (for it would seem certain that the discrepancies between index and catalogue point to losses) was in all likelihood due to the fact that Syon was used like many other monastic libraries[1] as a lending library. Indeed, as will be shewn below, of persons resident at Syon who used it, there were only thirteen priests and four deacons and perhaps the eight lay brethren. The other conceivable alternative (which the loss of Wyclif's writings may suggest), that dangerous literature was purposely removed, will not account for everything, for the losses include works that by no stretch of imagination could be deemed dangerous. In Appendix IV. a few of the more interesting of the lost volumes, containing several works, are resuscitated as far as possible from the scattered entries in the index, in the hope that by this means fresh light may be thrown on some obscure authors, and that even now some of these books may be discovered intact in English libraries.

The mass of duplicates possessed by the library may be ascribed to the fact that the library was dependent on the charity of benefactors and probably rejected no contributions. Benefactors were rewarded by the prayers of the monastery[2].

The persons who made this great collection of books were the monks and perhaps also the nuns of the Brigettine order, who lived at Syon, Isleworth, on the site of the house which is now the Duke of Northumberland's. The house was founded 1415 and was the only monastery of the order in England. The rule was planned to suit the needs of religious men and women serving God together in one church and dwelling in adjoining houses. An arrangement of this kind was adopted in many countries and at many times. The ministrations of priests being, of course, necessary to nuns, the idea of associating regular priests with nuns subject to the same rule naturally suggested itself at all times of religious revival when perfect chastity was sought. Time after time imperfect realization of what was, to ages half-civilized, a lofty ideal, led to its abandonment; religious men and women were then ordered to separate their houses that scandal might be avoided, and nuns were bidden to seek their spiritual ministrations at the hands of secular priests who should not dwell in their immediate neighbourhood. But time after time men sought once more to lead celibate lives under the protection of regular vows in the immediate neighbourhood of women under the same vows, each sex rendering as a rule certain defined services to the other. The Brigettine order comes last in this interesting chapter of monastic experiments. But as it would be out of place here to deal with the history of the order at any length, it may suffice to repeat the main facts of the well-known story. The rule of St Briget, a Swedish lady of the fourteenth century, required that there should be sixty women and thirteen priests, four deacons and eight lay brothers in every house of her order. An abbess was at the head, ruling the monastery as well in spirituals as temporals. A confessor-general presided (under the abbess) over the men in spirituals. Brethren and sisters had two separate dwellings but a church in common, arranged in two stories, the men celebrating the offices in the lower part in such a way that the nuns in the upper part should be able to see the high altar and hear the offices from their upper choir in the roof. The nuns dwelt on the north of the church, the monks on the south[1]. The brethren never entered the nuns' convent except with the sacrament for the sick or to bury the dead. Through an opening in the wall the brethren received clothing, food, and money at the abbess' direction.

The English interest in the Brigettine order dates from 1406 when Henry IV.'s daughter Philippa went to Sweden to become the wife of Eric, King of Norway, Sweden, and

[1] The architectural arrangements are minutely detailed in the Revelations of St Briget, Extrav. XXVIII. sqq.

Denmark. Immediately after the marriage the bridal party visited Wadstena, the parent house of the Brigettine order, already the richest monastery in Sweden; and the result of the visit was that an Englishman, Henry Lord Fitzhugh, who was in Queen Philippa's suite, promised to endow the order in England with his manor of Hinton near Cambridge. In 1408 John Peters, priest, and one deacon were sent to England. Peters stayed eight years[1], but it was not directly from his exertions that Syon sprang. Philippa visited Wadstena again Jan. 1415, and enrolled her name among the nuns, promising to live there if she should become a widow, and it is probable that at that time she began to use her influence to promote the interests of the order in England. In May of that year four Swedish nuns, three novices, and two priests were sent to England. It appears that Henry V. had agreed to found a house for them which was to be endowed out of the spoils of the Alien Monasteries dissolved in 1414. On 22 Feb. 1416 he laid the foundation of the church of Syon, of the monastery of St Saviour and St Briget of Syon, of the order of St Augustine. The Carthusian house at Sheen called Jesus of Bethlehem was founded at about the same time, and the two houses frequently acted together. The original Syon was near Twickenham, but after the manor of Isleworth was given to the nuns 1422, and rich property fell into their hands, a new house was begun in Isleworth 1426 on the present site of Syon House. In 1431 the convent moved and soon became enormously wealthy. At the dissolution of greater monasteries it ranked eighth in riches. It is possible that a search for Syon accounts might give some information on the purchase of books[2].

The Brigettine rule makes no mention of a library; it requires that the brethren and sisters shall have books necessary for the performance of divine service and of no other kind, unless for learning and study, but both at Wadstena and at Syon this clause received a wide interpretation. Wadstena had at its fall in 1540 one of the finest libraries of the north, and its books are now scattered in the collections of Upsala, Stockholm, Skokloster, and Linkoeping, where they may be recognized by their writing, binding, and monastic class-mark[1].

[1] Fant's Script. Rer. Suec. i. 125. He died in 1418, leaving many books and writings to Wadsten.

The English additions to the rule[2], arranged in one manuscript for men and in another for women, mention the existence of a library at Syon. "Silence after some convenience is to be kept in the lybrary, whyls any suster is there alone in recordyng of her redinge." It is ordered that the bishop shall enquire if there be an inventory or register of books of the library and how they and other books of study be kept and repaired.

An entry in the Martyrology (Add. 22285[3]) proves conclusively that at Syon there were two libraries, one for men and one for women. The men's library was kept by one of the thirteen priests, the women's by one of the nuns. The librarians were severally responsible for the prayers for the donors of books in their keeping. From numerous indications it can be shewn that the present catalogue is that of the men's library.

First, books known to have been written and printed specially for the use of the nuns do not appear in this catalogue. For instance the Orchard of Syon is not here either in MS. or in Wynkyn de Worde's printed edition of 1519. It contains an address to the "Religious modir and devout susteren, clepid and chosen bisili to laboure at the hous of Syon," and the MS. which belonged to Mr Wm. Morris[4] probably once belonged to the house. Wynkyn de Worde describes the finding of the copy from which his edition was printed. "A right worshipful and devout gentleman Master Richard Sutton Esq.[1], steward of the holy monastery of Syon, finding this ghostly treasure, these dialogues and revelacions of the new seraphical spouse of Christ, S. Katherine of Siena in a corner by itself willed of his great charity it should come to light," and printed it at great cost. Gascoigne's translation of the life of St Briget, written for the nuns[2], is not here, and the anonymous Mirror of our Lady, printed for the nuns in 1530, is not here in MS. as might be expected. The writer[3] addresses the unlettered nuns, those daughters of Syon who could not understand the Latin church service. He explains the various parts of the service in English. "Of Psalms I have drawn (into English) but few, for ye may have them of Richard Hampole's drawing and out of English Bibles if ye have licence thereto." The catalogue contains one copy of the English Psalter, and one interlinear Old Testament incomplete, wanting the Psalms and all the Books after the Song of Songs. Again, although the name of Whytford occurs frequently among the donors, the numerous works which he wrote or translated for the use of the nuns are not here. These were probably in the nuns' library.

Second, there are two pieces of direct evidence. Gascoigne by his will 1458[4] bequeathed all his books and "quires" written on paper to the brethren of Syon; he further expresses the wish that the work he wrote with his own hand on Scripture Verities, should be written on vellum or parchment at the expense of the monastery; if that be done, the monastery may keep also the volume in his own handwriting. It may be noted here that the copy of the work which is in the catalogue is not identical with the only copy now known to be extant, preserved at Lincoln College[1]. Works in the Syon Library are twice mentioned in Rogers' edition of the Loci e libro veritatum. On p. 170 he alludes to Grosseteste's letter on papal provisions which is N 16 of this catalogue, and also to a copy made by Simon Winter at Rome of attestations to St Briget's miracles, which is perhaps M 64 of this catalogue. Again, Margaret, Duchess of Clarence, widow of Thomas the brother of Henry V. (he died 1411), presented a Bible to the house, which is in the catalogue and has been identified with one now in existence that contains an entry stating that she gives it to the priest Simon Winter and the brethren of St Saviour's, Syon.

The absence from the catalogue of several famous Syon service-books[2] is to be explained by the fact that the church books, and those for chapter and refectory readings, were kept separately, in accordance with a clause of the additions to the rule, which places those for the women in the care of the chauntress, those for the men with the chantor. The absence of the English New Testament presented by Anne Danvers to the Confessor and Brethren 1517[3] calls for notice.

The names of the donors have been recorded as a rule, and the list includes but few persons of whom nothing is known. The number of donors who were London clergy is noticeably large. John Bracebridge one of the earliest Syon priests gave most of the manuscripts. The manuscript Syon Martyrologium[4] contains a calendar, which has not been printed, from which the dates of many of the benefactors can be ascertained. The chief facts concerning them are collected in Appendix I. The absence of Humphrey of Gloucester is surprising, as he was interested in the house[1]. Two Swedes are entered among the donors, and the names of six women donors are recorded. The Duchess of Clarence above-mentioned gave six volumes. It is in the list of donors of printed books that some of the best known names recur. The largest donor of Italian printed books was Dr Richard Reynold, fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, about 1510, and a priest of Syon, who was hanged with a group of the Carthusians from Sheen for denying the royal supremacy, 1535. Cardinal Pole has recorded his knowledge of Latin, Greek and Hebrew. His name occurs ninety-four times in the catalogue. John Fewterer, confessor-general, fellow of Pembroke College, 1505, gave seventy-six books. Concerning him and Father Curson, also one of the donors in this catalogue, Bedyll wrote to Secretary Cromwell that they were the saddest and best learned men of Syon. He found that one of the most obstinate in resisting the proposed changes was Richard Whytford, probably the donor of eighteen books in the catalogue. He had travelled abroad with Lord Mountjoy, Erasmus's patron, and was himself the friend of Erasmus and More. Roper says that it was Whytford who, as chaplain to Fox, Bishop of Winchester, warned More to beware how he dealt with that minister, as he would not stick to agree to his own father's death to serve Henry the Seventh's turn.

[1] A. Clark, Life and Times of Wood, IV. 271, is of opinion that Lincoln College has the Syon copy, but the fo. 2 does not agree with that of the catalogue.

[2] Among the Syon books not mentioned in the catalogue are the famous Processional at St John's College, Oxford, the Martiloge (Add. 22285) printed for the Bradshaw Society, the Horae B. Virg. and Visitatio infirmorum in usum S. Birgittae de Syon, in Add. 30514, the Formula Noviciorum by T. Prestius, brother of Syon, in the Cambridge Univ. Lib. Dd. [4] Whytford's translation of the Martiloge in englysshe after the vse of the chirche of Salisbury and as it is redde in Syon, printed 1526, has been edited for the Bradshaw Society. A few extracts from the Calendar are given in the preface, p. xxix.

Bedyll found it impossible to say much against any of these devout men in the summer of 1534. In August he writes that Whytford, "one of the most wilful of that house, preached, and would speak no words of the King's Grace's title; and this man hath but small learning[2] but is a great railer." In the winter Bedyll charged him with worse crimes. After many doctors had been at work to convert him, Bedyll

[1] Aungier, pp. 30, 53.

[2] Erasmus dedicated his translation of Lucian's Tyrannicida to him, but the editors of the Martiloge agree with Bedyll's verdict.

made his attempt. "I handled Whytford after that in the garden both with faire wordes and with foule, and shewed him that throughe his obstinacy he shuld be brought to the greate shame of the world for his irreligious life and for his using of bawdy wordes to diverse ladys at the time of thair confession, whereby (I seyed) he myght be the occasion that shrift shalbe layed downe throughe England; but he hath a brasyn forehed whiche shameth at nothing."

In 1539 the abbey surrendered to the King's commissioners; Curson and Whytford and several other donors of books appear on the pension list.

What became of the Library at the Dissolution? Only six of the books have as yet been identified as now in English libraries. It is probable that the publication of the catalogue will lead to the identification of many more. The Lady Abbess of Syon, Chudleigh, Devon, has been kind enough to inform me that among the documents now in the possession of the house there is an entry which states that most of the books were taken from the library of Syon by the Commissioners of Henry VIII. a short time before the monastery was suppressed. A certain number of old books and manuscripts were taken away by the community on their exile, and a large number of these were destroyed when the convent at Lisbon was burnt in 1651. Some of those saved were probably disposed of when the library of the brethren was sold about 1693. The sisters who returned to England in 1809 brought the rest with them, some were sold, and three cases of books were sent back to the sisters who remained in Lisbon; of these, two were lost in transit.

The six books that have been identified are:—

1. The Duchess of Clarence's Bible (E 1), now in the possession of Sir H. D. Ingilby, Ripley Castle, Yorkshire.

2. Bede's Ecclesiastical History (K 59), now at Bury St Edmund's, which came through the Norwich family of Styward.

3. A volume of monastic rules (M 72), now Add. 5208 in the British Museum.

4. Bracebridge's gift (L 33), Divisiones thematum etc.,

now B xv. 2 in Trinity Library, Cambridge. This volume was kindly brought to my notice by Dr M. R. James. It formerly belonged to Peter Le Neve and has his list of contents. It is not in the original binding. The leaf of parchment giving the contents, the incipit of fo. 2, and the donor's name, which was once nailed upon the outer board under a leaf of horn, is now pasted inside. The volume is a folio on vellum in an English hand of the fifteenth century.

5. The copy of Gervase of Tilbury (K 28), one of Bracebridge's gifts, is now, as Dr James has told me, I. 11 in the library of St John's College, Cambridge. Its previous owners were Tho. Wagstaffe and Tho. Baker. It is a folio on vellum written in several hands early in the fourteenth century. Its contents have been analysed by Dr Liebermann, who has noted in the catalogue that it is a recension of Gervase differing from that printed in Leibnitz, Script. Rer. Brunswic. I. The Chronica Martini penitentiarii which follows is Martin's second edition (Mon. Ger. Hist. SS. XXII.). The volume is in the original binding, boards covered with white skin. Upon the cover is nailed the parchment slip which gives the entry in the catalogue, donor's name and incipit of fo. 2. There is no indication of the class-mark.

6. The Ricardus de S. Victore and other tracts (N 49), given by John Steyke, is in the same library, E 28. The first eight leaves are missing. It is not in the original binding.

Bale's note-book (in the Selden MS. 64 B, now being edited by Mr R. L. Poole for the Anecdota Oxoniensia) offers some evidence which seems to prove that several Syon books passed into the hands of the historian and printer Richard Grafton (d. 1572?), perhaps through the influence of Cromwell, who assisted him on other occasions. Thus under Joannes Clipston (f. 99 b) the reference which Bale gives as authority for the title of his work is "Ex spoliis Syon per Grafton." Clipston's name however is not given in the present catalogue. But under Joannes Dalton (f. 100 b) the work Super Decretales, T 77 in the Syon catalogue, is named "ex domo Ricardi Grafton." Again he is Bale's authority for a work of Hugo de Evesham, the existence of which was known to Tanner only through this catalogue (B 15), and B 5 would seem to have passed into his hands, as Grafton was Bale's authority for the titles of books by English writers which there occur. The Syon list of the works of John Walleys, lists of whose works are apt to differ, tallies remarkably well with Bale's list from Grafton's library. The lost Campus Florum[1], perhaps the campeflour of A 67 in this catalogue, the Latin-English dictionary so often quoted in the Promptorium Parvulorum, was known to Bale from a Grafton manuscript. The works of the Syon monk Thomas Ismaelita (not in the catalogue) were known to Bale through Grafton. Under Robertus Cowton, Bale, who calls him (f. 19 b) "Archiepiscopus Armachanus," names the sermons delivered at St Paul's Cross, all "ex domo Ricardi Grafton," who no doubt possessed S 30 of this catalogue. This volume included also a work of Hugo de Sueth, which appears, with the same reference, on f. 61 of the note-book. A 4 of this catalogue was also his, for he is named as the authority for the works of Nydyard, Birkendale, Alexander de Hales, Kilwardby, Serlo, and Roger Bacon, which are there entered. Lastly the "Cronicon Cronicarum" (K 57) occurs, with the genders similarly mixed, in Grafton's list of the authorities used by him for his Chronicle. If Grafton's library were reconstructed from the note-book doubtless other striking similarities would be found.

I find no mention of Syon Library in Leland's Collectanea. A reference has been made to him by Aungier, but the mistake is due to a misinterpretation of Tanner.

The later history of the house has been fully told by Aungier and others, and it remains only to recall the fact that after it had served as a place of confinement for Katherine Howard 1541—2, had passed to the Protector Somerset, and then to his enemy Dudley, in Mary's reign the house was re-established and a few nuns returned. With Elizabeth's accession they left for Flanders (Dendermonde) and ultimately for Lisbon, 1594. In 1809 nine of the nuns left Lisbon for England and lived at Walworth. In 1840 a few were living at Cobridge in Staffordshire; the present dwelling-place is Syon House, Chudleigh. By an odd coincidence the name Sion College was chosen at the beginning of the 17th century for an institution which possesses a great library with a valuable collection of early printed books. It is of course wholly unconnected with the monastery.

In conclusion I have to apologize for the many errors and deficiencies which mar this edition of the catalogue of Syon Monastery. I began to copy the manuscript out of mere curiosity, with scarcely a suspicion of the countless bibliographical pitfalls into which I was walking, for the whole of the land was to me undiscovered country. I have had sudden and painful revelations of mistakes mercifully averted, and these warn me of those many others that must be lying unseen. From negligences and ignorances not to be numbered I have been saved by the vigilance of Mr Jenkinson, who generously undertook the painful task of revising the whole of the proof. I cannot hope to thank him adequately for all that he has done to help me by encouragement, suggestion, and correction.

Dr M. R. James and Mr R. L. Poole have kindly given me notes which I have distinguished by their initials. Mr Madan, Professor Maitland, and Mr G. F. Warner have helped me in various difficulties. The Lady Abbess of Syon House, Chudleigh, has sent me courteous replies to my enquiries. I have severely taxed the patience of library officials while making chase for the desired opening words of many a second leaf, but the never-failing help of Mr A. Rogers and the freedom with which I was allowed access to the early printed books in the University Library helped to make the task for me an easy one. At the Bodleian Library too, the Librarian gave me every possible facility. Also I owe my thanks to the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, for the use of the manuscript, and to Mr C. W. Moule, the librarian, I am very specially indebted for the many arrangements which he made for my convenience in copying and constantly consulting the manuscript, as well as for the interest which he has taken in the progress of the work. Lastly I desire gratefully to acknowledge the kindness of his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, who has generously contributed to the cost of publication. I am sorry that I have not been able to make constant reference to Mr Robert Proctor's valuable work on early printed books as the catalogue was nearly all printed off before his first part came out.

I am aware that the present catalogue merely pieces together the skeleton of a dead library. To clothe it with flesh, and to make it being dead to speak, these things are for those who know as familiar friends the books and writers, the printers and editions of which it has to tell.

[1] Partially restored from the original Index. Only volumes which contain the works of several authors and appear of special interest have been noted, and as the whole of class T has been considerably reorganized it is omitted from the regrouping. The resuscitation cannot be complete because no contents are given for some of the folios, these perhaps being occupied by anonymous tracts. Nor can the order of entries be precisely ascertained when no foliation is given or when more than one entry has the same folio reference.
